Richard "Rick" Kornfeld, a San Diego telecommunications executive, and Michael Martin, a leader in the health care services industry, have joined the board of directors of the La Jolla Institute for Allergy and Immunology.

The institute is a nonprofit biomedical research institute and one of the world's leaders in immunology research.

Mitchell Kronenberg, Ph.D., LIAI president and scientific director, said the institute is expanding its board to enable more involvement from San Diego area residents, who can enhance the community's awareness and interaction with the institute, while also bringing extensive management expertise from San Diego's distinguished business community.

Most recently, Kornfeld was executive vice president and chief strategy officer for NextWave Wireless (Nasdaq: WAVE) and NextWave Broadband, and currently serves as an advisor to various corporations. His other executive positions have included: vice president of engineering at Qualcomm (Nasdaq: QCOM), and co-founder, chairman and CEO of Dot Wireless, which was acquired by Texas Instruments (NYSE: TXN).

Martin is president of the International Oncology Network, a diversified physician services network. He brings more than 20 years of executive and health care leadership experience to the LIAI board. His executive management positions include working with GE Medical Systems, Premier, and Tensys Medical. Most recently, Martin held the position of CEO for Tensys Medical.
